

The Graduate Interdisciplinary Specialization in Sexuality Studies

The Graduate Interdisciplinary Specialization (GIS) in Sexuality Studies enables graduate students enrolled in graduate programs at Ohio State to enhance their regular course of study with 12 credit hours of course work in the field of Sexuality Studies.

The subject of human sexuality has increasingly become the focus of academic research and scholarship from a wide range of perspectives, including the humanities, social sciences, sciences, and many professions. The field looks at how sexual practices, expressions, and representations are shaped by social, educational, religious, historical, psychological, literary, legal, and political contexts. It pays particular attention to the tension between non-normative sexualities and genders, and the concept of heteronormativity against which they are typically defined. Sexuality Studies also investigates the ways that sexuality is shaped by social differences, such as race, gender, (dis)ability, nationality, and socioeconomic status.

The benefits of pursuing a GIS in Sexuality Studies are several. For one, it provides graduate student with expertise in an interdisciplinary field that is transforming academic work in many disciplines as well as across disciplines. It can thus inform the work that students do for their master’s theses and dissertations, and consequently, position them to compete on the academic job market or, alternatively, in professional fields where such training is vital (e.g., health services, law, social work, education). More generally, the GIS in Sexuality Studies helps students improve their understanding of sexuality in cross-cultural, transnational, and historical contexts.

At least four courses must be part of the 12 hours for the GIS in Sexuality Studies, with at least 9 of those hours taken outside a student’s home graduate program (including cross-listed courses so long as the student enrolls in a department other than his/her own). At least 9 of the 12 hours must be at the 5000-level or above. One three-hour 4000-level class can count towards the GIS so long as it is taken outside the student’s home department. Students may also count up to 3 hours of directed study: Sexuality Studies 5191 (Internship), 5193 (Individual Study), 5194 (Group Study), or 5700 (Workshop) toward the GIS. Students and faculty may petition the coordinating adviser to count courses other than those listed here to fulfill the requirements of the GIS.

Note: Only those courses taught by instructors with a Ph.D. may count toward the GIS. Please check with the relevant department, before enrolling, if you have any questions.
